Thanks so much Joe. And if they happen to still be there on Saturday, remember I'll be up in Fairbanks that weekend if they wanted to meet then.

Governor,

The request that came in from the White River First Nation came in with a date during your trip to DC. As such, I made an offer to meet them in Fairbanks. The original date fell through and now Commissioner Irwin and I will be meeting with them on Tuesday afternoon in Fairbanks. The reason for that location is that they can drive there in just a few hours.

Joe

I guess the White River First Nationâ€™s request for consultations were with the Murky Administration that wasnâ€™t well received. Sarah is I guess planning meetings with them. Sheâ€™ll probably â€œpull a rabbit out of the hatâ€ on this one. I see Sarah as the â€œPR Ladyâ€ throughout the whole project moving it along quickly, something no one else had the skills and/or willing to do. With Murkyâ€™s people, it was probably the â€œpompous assâ€ approach in most of what they did or did not do. Sarah has excellent PR skills as evidenced by her run for Governor.

Yukon First Nation seeks own Alaska pipeline deal

Last Updated: Friday, March 2, 2007 | 1:30 PM CT

CBC News <file:///C:/news/credit.html>

The Yukon's White River First Nation is in Alaska this week trying to negotiate a separate deal for a right-of-way should a natural gas pipeline be built down the Alaska Highway.

The First Nation, based in Beaver Creek near the Alaska border, made its pitch Thursday at a hearing of the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission in the state capital of Juneau.

Connie Larochelle said the First Nation has members in the Yukon and Alaska and is willing to negotiate a deal with pipeline developers.

"We do know, for example, that where the pipeline enters into Alaska we do have a mass grave site in that proximity and we also have a fish camp close to the Alaska/Canada border," Larochelle said.

"We would highly encourage anybody that is contemplating putting a project through White River First Nation to negotiate a consultation protocol so that any impacts can be mitigated or avoided altogether."

Larochelle admits invitations sent by the First Nation to the oil companies three years ago asking for consultations were not well received, but she says that's because the First Nation also wanted the companies to pay for the negotiations.

Larochelle said the First Nation has sent a letter to Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin and meetings are being planned.

The proposed Alaska Highway pipeline would carry gas from Alaska's North Slope through the Yukon to markets in the south.

> - Mr. Taylor's ultimate claim to fame was his intense personal satisfaction with his important role in moving Canadian wolves into Yellowstone National Park.
> - At a conference in Homer with Deborah Williams' group (now known as the Alaska Conservation Voters), Mr. Taylor recounted his efforts to aid the restoration of wolves to Yellowstone National Park including the line, "I cried when the wolves were released at Yellowstone". Very progressive, Ken! Now every hunter in the whole country is crying over this unmitigated disaster.
> - Mr. Taylor, an active liberal, was an enthusiastic supporter and campaigner for Democrat Fran Ulmer's unsuccessful run for governor.
> - In Fairbanks, from about '85 to '91 (or so) he had dismal performance. His penchant for playing golf and chasing "the good life" sent him on the National and International meetings circuit to the point that the Fairbanks staff referred to him as "The Vacancy Factor".
> - Mr. Taylor's tenure at Region III in Fairbanks followed a stint as one of the worst area biologist's in corporate memory. He was assigned in Dillingham (Mulchatna Caribou herd, etc.) where he distinguished himself by never having any data for the Board (or probably the Region) on population dynamics or changes. He virtually sat in the chair and accomplished nothing.
> - As the management coordinator in cahoots with Chris Smith (ultra greenie and "anti" sympathizer), he made sure Bob Stevenson, one of arguably the best five wolf biologists in the world was taken out as the Department's wolf expert and re-assigned as an area biologist. The new wolf guy was a much better "yes" man.

- Taylor was "responsible" for decisions during the Department's GMU 20A wolf control efforts and could have easily avoided the confrontation with Gordon Haber, which put Gordie on the evening news after the Dept. muffed efficiently killing a wolf in a snare with the cameras rolling.
- In the 1990s, Taylor worked for some time as the Deputy Director of the Division of Wildlife Conservation under his CSU college buddy and longtime friend Wayne Reglin. Among his notable achievements, he can be credited (at least in part) with the Department's disastrous wolf sterilization program.
- He was later appointed Director of Habitat under Tony Knowles and was at the helm during the time they really got into trouble. There were eyewitness accounts of Habitat staffers throwing pizza parties to celebrate their victories in shutting down commercial/industrial endeavors. Murkowski subsequently moved Habitat to DNR to neutralize the Division's radical environmental gang's ability to stifle industry/development.
- Throughout his career, Taylor was uniformly known as a worthless supervisor by those he supervised, except for the habitat folks whom he let do anything the regional Habitat Supervisor wanted to do.

Governor and Mike,

Jeff Jessee sent the MHTA nomination on February 22 (after the confirmation list was due to the Legislature). I've included a memo with the nomination. If it's good, I'll prepare a letter and send it down to the speaker and president—they already know this was going to be late. I provided a hard copy of the memo and the resume to Kari and Janice yesterday so it may in your piles of reading material.

Also, when you guys have time, Local Boundary Commission is heating up. Privileged or Personal Material Red Privileged or Pe I'll explain why when I see you guys.
